

The Case Americans are Trying to Make about $$$ in Politics

The Problem

In 2010, when the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission struck down laws restricting corporate and union spending in elections, Americans from all political backgrounds expressed outrage. Today, when Americans are asked if they believe big money has a corrupting influence on our political process, the answer is a resounding "YES."

Democrats, Libertarians and Republicans alike are affected by the threat of Big Money in political campaigns. Smart, civic-minded Americans of all political stripes have been sidelined from holding office simply because of the likelihood of being outspent ten-to-one by an opponent that is financed by a handful of anonymous donors with a narrow political agenda. Sitting officeholders have no choice but to spend inordinate amounts of time fundraising instead of performing their duties as public servants. Every decision a politician makes is influenced disproportionately by large donors simply because these are the people s/he sees and hears from the most. "Government by and for the people," is a concept we may never fully achieve but one for which it is our patriotic duty to strive.

First Steps

SCR-2 and HCR-49 filed by R. Ellis, and S. Thompson, respectively, call for an amendment to the United States Constitution that re-establishes that laws governing the spending of money to influence elections are constitutional. SCR-2 & HCR-49 call on the United States Congress to propose an amendment;

Any proposed Constitutional Amendment requires ratification by 3/4 of all states. This is the process devised by our Founders that enables We the People to regain control of our government. In this instance, our task is to codify the difference between an individual's right to free speech from a legal entity's desire to spend unlimited dollars to influence elections. This is the first step in restoring the political voices of average Americans.

Americans: Citizens United bad for democracy:

- A recent survey¹ found that overall, 69% of Americans agreed with this statement: "New rules that let corporations, unions and people give unlimited money to Super PACs will lead to corruption." Only 15% disagreed.
- Three out of four Republicans (74%) agreed with this statement.
- In a similar poll², more than two out of three (67%) independent voters said the ruling has a negative impact on political campaigns.

Money in politics doesn't pass the smell test:

- More than two-thirds of respondents (68%) in the ORC poll¹— including 71% of Republicans — also agreed that, "if a company spent $100,000 to help elect a member of Congress, it could successfully pressure him or her to change a vote on proposed legislation." Only one in five respondents disagreed.

"Sure, there are bad apples in the barrel, but the real problem is that the barrel is rotten."

-David Donnelly, Campaign for Fair Elections

Increased campaign spending erodes trust:

- Over two out of three Republicans (67%) in the OCR poll¹ said "they trust government less because big donors to SuperPACs have more influence than regular voters." 159 people contributed 60% of SuperPAC funds in 2012.

Steps should be taken to curb spending:

- A third poll³ showed that over two-thirds of Americans (69%) felt SuperPACs should be illegal – and 52% said they strongly supported their elimination.
- Sixty-nine percent of Tea Party supporters felt that superPACs should be outlawed.

In both cases, the object is a constitutional amendment that will provide the grounds for rational laws that have to do with money in politics. Over 600 such resolutions have already been passed across the country.

Sixteen state legislatures have passed resolutions.

Will you stand with the majority of Americans who are calling for action?

By passing these resolutions in Texas, our state will become a major force in restoring trust in government.
